

Regarding subsidizing my local exchange carrier with a fee paid to my wireless ISP, it doesn't seem quite fair. Certainly if the LEC were to offer a wireless solution, or support for the solution, I would be inclined to allow a small fee to cover their coordination of the service, but to give them the money, just cause they always managed it before seems unreasonable.

The fee itself seems difficult to assign to a single LEC, since wireless services can cross service areas, including multiple LEC's who should get the fee, the conectee or the connector.

Since the service is quite young, and the proper management and coordination of the service hasn't been aestablished, what would the fee be covering? It seems to be a tax on the user, that doesn't benefit any users.
